J. W. Shumaker, Signal Corps.

Mr. Sam Lumkin has returned from a pleasant visit to his old home in Jefferson City, Mo.

Every exhibitor on Exhibition day will be presented with a ticket to the Art Loan exhibition.

On Monday afternoon the members of the Chicago and All American base ball teams will be given a reception at the Art Loan.

Messrs. C. E. Darker, Phil Strubel and Perkins & Holbrook have placed an arc light in front of their business houses. It is very attractive.

Saturday will be "school day" again at the Art Loan exhibition when the school children will be admitted from two to six, for ten cents.

Owing to the crowded condition of the hall in the evening during the Catholic fair the children are particularly requested to come in the afternoon.

Workmen are rapidly completing the second story of the Hutchinson Williams stable on Cascade avenue. It will be the handsomest stable in the county when completed.

Mr. S. D. Bradford of College Park Observatory, will open a down town office to-day, and will use the west window of Robinson's drug store for the display of flowers.

Dr. D. P. Frame, a veterinary surgeon of long practice and much reputed skill, has removed from Burlington, Iowa, to this city with his family and will locate here for the practice of his profession.

In the contest between the engineers of the various railroads for the older pre sented by President Scott, of the Midland, at the Catholic fair the Rock Island man has 52 votes to the Midland man 15.

There will be no ladies at the banquet to the Rock Island officials to-morrow night. There was too little room. This statement is made because there has been some uncertainty among those who will attend.

There was another large crowd at the Catholic fair last night and a good time was enjoyed by all. Only two articles were raffled off, a silk banner, Bill's note for $50 and a number of articles will be raffled this evening. The price of admission will be 15 cents after be ten cents.

Master Metcalf Bass, assisted by a number of his young republican friends yesterday afternoon erected a Harrison and Morton pole in the rear of his father's residence with appropriate exercises. The pole is forty feet high and flies the stars and stripes and a campaign streamer.

In a joint circular issued by the Colorado Railway association announcement is made that the tariff of 55 cents per 100 pounds named in circular No. 146 on cable railway machinery and heavy castings from East St. Louis to Denver, will be withdrawn and the regular tariff rates will apply.

Yesterday afternoon there was a very interesting political meeting held at Colorado City. A large audience assembled in the hall in the Adams Block and were addressed by Hon. E. O. Wolcott, Judge Ward, Judge Fields and Hon. John Campbell. The republicans of Colorado City are united and are fighting for the ticket straight through.

Why do men with loaded teams let them stand in front of the business houses on Tejon street? Yesterday two loads of slabs and a load of hay stood for more than an hour in front of a prominent dry goods house, thus shutting out all carriages that wished to stop. They could just as well have hitched on the side streets.

Next week promises to be a notable one in theatrical matters. Held by the Enemy, a play that cannot be too highly commended for its naturalness and dramatic strength, will be put on at the opera house by the Madison Square Theatre company and with the same scenery and effects that were employed in New York. Popular prices of admission will be charged for this engagement.

In contest between the engineers of the different roads running into the city for the possession of a very fine copper cent, to be voted at the Catholic fair to the most popular engineer, will take place Saturday night, October 27. The names of candidates are as follows: James Smith, Midland railroad; William McMurray, A. T. & S. F. railroad; F. Desmond, D. & R. G. railroad; J. H. Keefe, D., T. & G. railroad; C. Jones, Rock Island.

Mr. A. R. Ballou, of 26 Pike's Peak avenue, has added to his bindery a nine job printing office. This week he is overhauled is now placing in position one of the nicest little job printing outfits in the city. He has two new Gordon presses, a ton of fine type and a good stock of paper. All the machinery will be for the binding and printing office. The outfit is not for show and as he will employ only a few hands he hopes to establish a good trade in commercial and blank book printing.

At a meeting of the Believe Sunday school on Monday it was announced that the collection for the month to be collected before commencing the work. The best thanks of the society are due to many of our citizens for their generous exertions on behalf of the proposed institution. Excellent buildings can be made out of energy. The society are proud to feel that the work commends itself to the whole community, and they feel encouraged to hope that in the near future the foundation stone of the building will be laid, which will be the means of relief to many a suffering fellow creature, while it is an enduring witness to the fact that there are those among us whose motto is Deeds not Words.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1888.

FRENCH DETECTIVES.

Peculiarities of the French System and Methods

Described by a Late Superintendent of the Force.

Influences which Tend to Injure Their Efficiency.

PARIS, October 5, 1888.

The detective service of the Paris police department, on which I wanted and held for six months to serve, has been for some time in a chronic state of unsatisfactoriness. I was director of criminal investigations from 1879 to the end of March 1884, after previously serving twenty-five years in the police as commissaire or district superintendent. I retired voluntarily from that arduous post because I could not carry out the reforms which I considered and still consider absolutely indispensable.

The French detective system is fettered round by so many vexatious administrative restrictions that it may now be regarded as the worst managed force of the kind on the European continent. Outside the department of the Seine, of which Paris is the capital, my detectives were quite powerless except in cases of the gravest import. Even then the special permissions to act is only granted most condescendingly. Our system suffers from the usual dry rot that withers everything in France—politics and red tape.

The detective police force is placed under the control of two separate departments—the one nominated by the Paris municipal council, and the other by the minister of the interior. This does not add to the efficiency of the service, as the casual jealousy of the municipal council and the opportunist central government [illegible]. The causes which have rendered the detective force to something [illegible] are merely political. Since Paris has had a municipal council elected by universal suffrage the central executive has steadily declined all its duties towards keeping the police department under its control, and the cost of the municipal police, whose action is properly extends only over the [illegible] of the peace—that is, the policemen in uniform—has swamped such preventive force as the chief of the active branch, that the latter has now two masters.

[illegible] in formality. The multiplicity of formalities interposing between the application to the police force for its services and compliance with [illegible] for such services is such, that the theft of murder has fully forty-eight hours' start of the superintendent. Often a period of two days must elapse, thus affording ample time for the escape of criminals to [illegible]. We want no advance in our system of criminal investigation not unlike that inaugurated in England by the appointment of Mr. Howard Vincent. Fortunately our crime does not demand the same spontaneous action that is needed to detect English and American malefactors. It is more common place. We have indeed, some notable swindlers and forgers, but the same phase of evil doing in England and the United States has reached a degree of perfection that would render detection very difficult in France. Among our criminals there is sometimes a display of a certain amount of ingenuity, but the faculty of criminal organization, developed among Anglo Saxons amounts to positive genius.

But as if delay was apparently not considered sufficient to protect the criminal class the authorities have adopted an arrangement whereby detectives have to be accompanied by policemen in uniform so that the former cannot fail to be known and recognized by [illegible] interest it is to acquire such information.

Here is an instance of how the dual control works. Detectives can't be told off for duty at race exhibitions and races in theatres, and indeed wherever crowds are expected to assemble, but instead of being allowed to mix unobtrusively with the public and to receive their orders from officers in plain clothes, they are placed under an inspector in uniform called chef de poste. As this officer is seen ordering them about, the faces of the men get known to the criminal classes, so that instead of being able to watch others unsuspected they are themselves watched and are marked out for mischievous tricks and sometimes rough usage. At the opera balls we have detectives in plain clothes, but what is the use of sending them when they are made to enter the same by the police door with the men in uniform so they become known to all the employés of the house?

Not only, however, is the efficiency of the detective police force destroyed by [illegible] delay, the sending of copies on an endless journey from one bureau to another and from a conflict of jurisdiction between rival [illegible] chief of the municipal police may be said to have set up a private detective staff of [illegible] his own which works independently of [illegible] the department of [illegible] [illegible] Municipal [illegible] to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Our increasing advertising patronage compels us to make a supplement of a morning edition. Advertisers appreciate the value of the GAZETTE as an advertising medium.

There are a good many reports coming in what Harrison said to-day. Look out for more such. What he did say was that "No man wants war." Let us hope that he may make good on this day of grace for the interests of agriculture and the prosperity of the country.

The survey of a voting census by the New York Herald at New York state is pretty good testimony regarding the chances in that state. The democrats started out in that campaign with almost every point in their favor. In 1888 the democratic vote was greater than the mugwump and republican vote together. But now there is a great deal of worry.

One of the most common complaints during republican rule was that republican officials were required to contribute to campaign expenses. But no such brazen attempts were made to collect money as in the days of Jay Hubbell. We are now being mulct by democratic leaders. There is no reason why the federal office holder should give to their party any more than he should be taxed on his salary.

At enthusiastic southern democratic orators called on a delegation of colored Indianola citizens at a public meeting to "hear the truth." The enthusiastic response was: "Why, my dear fellow citizens, we never stole from you, so we have more cash for that donation than you." The old fellow replied, I did not see that exactly, for I will swear I did not pay but five cents a yard for the cloth.

Mr Wolcott created much amusement on Wednesday night when he told his audience that one of the orators had one speech which they used every place they went. This description does not apply to Mr Patterson and his managers for the Wolcott hall makes it absolutely necessary for the democratic orators to carry two speeches with them. One they use in talking to an audience of protectionists to convince them that free raw materials means higher prices, the other they use in trying to convince an audience of free trade republicans that lower prices

David B. Medell who fought at Fort Fisher and lost a leg on the field has a salary as postmaster at New York Mills of six hundred dollars. He exercises a most able support. He has been a good and able soldier and a deserving citizen and has filled positions of trust and honor. He was selected for the place on Monday night on one of the banners was inscribed. Free Whisky, Beer for Medell." Then it was probably not one of the reasons why civil service reform rules. It was dictated simply by partisan feeling. If there were democratic returned soldiers needing places and there were not enough to go around I would not even quote to but to give the democratic soldiers a chance as well as the republican. But when wounded republicans are turned out of office to give the place to able bodied men who never fought, it shows that the pledges of the administration regarding soldiers are not worth the paper they were written on. [illegible] the manner in which [illegible] party was going to Republicans [illegible] to the opinion of [illegible] soldier who is a good and [illegible] who is not, other things [illegible] there should be no hesitancy.

MAKING NEWSPAPERS.

WALTER WELLMAN ENTERTAINS TELLS HOW THE WORK IS DONE

It Is a Wonderful Business, Complicated Work, and Requires the Brains and Bodies of an Army of People—Some of the Details Described.

(Special Correspondence.)

CHICAGO Oct. 4.—The question often asked the methods by which a great newspaper is made up, the greatest of its establishment and administration. A not unnatural fact is the large number of men who assist each day in the getting up of a big morning paper like The Chicago Tribune, Times, Inter Ocean or Herald. Add to the twelve hundred local correspondents hired by a paper like The Tribune in all the cities and towns of the west and north west, to its Washington and New York staffs sending home over special wires to the many thousand correspondents of the sparkling papers in large cities who contribute their mite to the Chicago paper whenever occasion requires, and to all those the almost innumerable agents, presidents of the Associated Press, secretary and its sister news collecting societies in Europe and throughout the world, and you begin to get an adequate idea of the vastness of the machinery employed.

Now let us take a look at the office into which all these men pour their contributions, the central nerve around which all this great [illegible] revolves. It is a building which rears up five stories and a basement. On the ground floor is the counting room, where all the business of the paper is transacted. Here thirty men are employed in one capacity or another. Underneath, the press room at which we shall again have occasion to take a look. Rising up in the elevator we reach the editorial floor. It is open. All over the world's great work gathering news for this paper, but not much is done yet in the office itself. The managing editor's assistant has just finished reading all the morning papers, and is now looking over the morning's mail and assorting batch. Here are letters from citizens and inventions about almost everything under the sun, many, many manuscripts, complaints, communications from [illegible] points, offers of special work, suggestions to the editor, poetry, stories, etc. Many of these he saves for the eye of his superior, but the majority are assigned to various assistants for rejection. And in the number of these assistants and their special fitness for the work which they have in charge we get a very good idea of the ramifications of a great newspaper.

In the managing editor's desk are a number of pigeon holes, a [illegible] "counting room," "mailing clerk," "cold [illegible]," etc. Into these he has given instructions about local matters, and in a few minutes the city editor is looking them over. The mail communications go to the department editor, some direct [illegible] to the musical critic, art critic, [illegible] to the art writer. If there are any communications requiring commercial matters they go to the [illegible] special page. The literary editor gets the new books, magazines and kindred [illegible] and [illegible] reports. He [illegible] his share. There are many communications [illegible] first go to the sporting editor. There are letters which must go about the counting room, such as bills to pay and [illegible] to be sent to out of town [illegible] special writers. Some of the more important manuscripts are read and passed upon by the managing editor himself or his immediate assistant. There are many questions not connected in any way with the business of the paper to be answered, for every newspaper has its quota of readers who want information about all sorts of questions. These are turned over to a [illegible] man with regard to [illegible] sometimes for answering them. "If [illegible] who send odd queries to newspaper offices knew the trouble they were causing a poor man I think they would be less free with [illegible] which no one in the wide world is in fact tell but themselves. It is a sort of rule in all newspaper offices that these queries are to be answered and a newspaper does not like to own up that it [illegible] anything that anybody wants to know which it cannot find out. I have known a reporter to spend a day or two looking about town for an answer to a little question; often a man goes to the city library and spends half a day looking up some disputed point for a couple of readers who have made a wager and I have seen the managing editor send out two or three telegrams, at his own expense, in order to get, and get promptly, an answer to some question which could be answered only by a man familiar with the history or politics of another city or state.

You have no idea of the quantity of manuscript—newspaper men usually call it "stuff," though reading in their case—which comes into a large newspaper office. There are stories and poems and essays and all sorts of things which somebody must read, special articles written for pay if they prove acceptable. Innumerable letters of travel and almost numberless letters from people and their summer resorts. So many people imagine that as soon as they get on the ocean or at some far away place they can entry the editor of their newspaper is overwhelmingly anxious to hear from them to know how they took a trip on a [illegible] boat, a lake or river, how they danced at the hotels or caught fish. It is the [illegible] they have seen and thought on their travels to the extent of a column or more. Usually they are very much disappointed when they discover that their contributions have been thrown into the waste basket, but why they should be is one of the mysteries of human nature. A great many people will sacrifice themselves arrogance and loss of time if they will try to understand that to a newspaper like all other things which are the fruit of brains and skill and experience must largely be the work of men who know what to write and how to write it, and that the chances are at least ten to one the amateur cannot write anything which an editor would care to print. The fact that you are in Europe or the wilds of Arizona does not make an impression on the editors and if for [illegible] is daily almost hourly communication by telegraph with all parts of the world the fact that you are in Asiatic Kamschatka does not make your letters any more interesting to him or his readers than if you were at home in the North ward. On the contrary, you mean a good deal more [illegible] communication from you about some evil or outrage in that ballpark will catch the editor's eye much quicker than a letter of travel from Africa. All successful editors have learned that [illegible] must be news, so to speak, to secure and retain popularity and [illegible] of these [illegible] newspaper [illegible] of [illegible] ratio of the [illegible] from the city [illegible] to publish it. To that [illegible]

The Chicago [illegible] million [illegible] Chicago. The [illegible] the [illegible] and [illegible] wonderful. Every [illegible] are [illegible] Herald, [illegible] which [illegible] plaining [illegible] space for [illegible] which [illegible] by a [illegible]
